

Modern Vaccines Adjuvants & Delivery Systems

MVADS 2003 - 4-6 June 2003, The Alexander Hotel, Dublin, Ireland

The drive for the new generation of vaccine therapies has precipitated a concurrent need for new and improved adjuvantation/delivery systems for these new vaccines. This new international conference will focus on updating the community on new adjuvant/delivery systems/technologies associated with developing modern vaccines strategies and vaccine research. There is now an urgent need for the development of these potent and safe adjuvants and delivery systems and MVADS 2003 will offer researchers a forum to discuss this important topic in detail.

Modern vaccines are poorly immunogenic and need to be coupled with adjuvants/immunopotentiators to improve their effectiveness. There is also now a general realization that delivery of an antigen is critical to the success of a vaccine and that this whole topic has been, until recently, a neglected component of vaccinology with most of the emphasis being placed on antigen engineering. Now things have changed: there are a number of delivery systems that can potentiate and modulate, quantitatively and qualitatively, immune responses. MVADS 2003 offers an opportunity to discuss the different adjuvant/delivery systems available, their relative advantages and disadvantages and results obtained thus far and where new developments are beginning to appear.

MVADS 2003 will be of interest to researchers/contributors from academic programs, industrial, governmental and regulatory groups.
